One of the most popular patterns which have been available for decades, but not until recently have been found to be perfectly suited to the development of plantarflexors. This is a complete heel cushion development boot and includes all the components and instructions needed to create one's own, your only raw materials being your feet. This is for the apprentice. These instructions are for the home craftsman, the skilled craftsman, or someone that is to have a completed product that is high quality. The instructions are in detail, and the instructions are given in sequence, as the patterns and parts are constructed. Choosing a pattern is up to you. Do you have talent? Do you have the will to learn? Do you have an instructor? Do you have the time? How in the world will your support system be if there are no other like minded individuals in your area? The type of footwear to be manufactured does influence which pattern can be used. This is the complete heel cushion development boot. Some of the other patterns which are available are for the barefoot, wearable sole, and other styles of shoes, but this is not for a wearable sole. You must use a canvas or leather type of shoe to develop the pattern. Your only raw materials are your feet. This is not for someone that is used to working in a footwear factory. This is not for someone that has been unable to develop plantarflexors due to plantar fasciitis, it is for the apprentice to the craft. A choice of plantarflexion patterns have been selected and tested by many individuals and concluded that the one named here is best. This pattern is the one most often used by many designers. The uni-strut has been tested and tested with many types of footwear. The pattern is the most comfortable pattern when used
